Forest Friends

A decade after a pioneering mahogany harvesting program paired Taylor with a community in Honduras, a model of sustainable social forestry is thriving and spreading.

By Jim Klein
Bob Taylor’s interest in Honduras began at the airport in La Ceiba where he was introduced to the Fifth Anniversary of Taylor’s involvement in sustainable forest management. After meeting with the staff of Maderasverde, Dick and Carambat’s Kraili and traveled to the communities of Copan and Miramar, then flew to San Roque, where the principal manager is still there. By being uplifted to the U.S. a selection of Bob and Beck’s photos, featured here, captures some of the sights of their travels.
